'Eliminating corporal punishment: A human rights imperative for Europe's children'

06/03/2008

IJJO / International Juvenile Justice Observatory

Europea Union, European Union - 'Eliminating corporal punishment: A human rights imperative for Europe's children' is the title of a recent publication by the Council of Europe. The International Juvenile Justice Observatory (IJJO) invites you to consult it.

This book illustrates the ban of corporal punishment of children from an international and regional legal perspective, the current context of physical punishment of the child in European countries, the recent research results, their effects and proportions as well as the children's point of view. Finally it emphasizes the importance of banning corporal punishment which is a process that involves changes at a legal and political level.

RESEARCH AND THESIS

Models of Restorative Justice and the Reform of the Juvenile Justice System in Greece

Nikolaos Stamatakis

Greece - The young prison population in Greece continues to grow. The starting point was that there has been a conflict, or 'crime' and we would like to react to it. In our response we use the paradigm of 'restorative justice'. The purpose of that study was to explore why we chose this concept, and what is its possible impact on those who have been involved in the conflict with special regard to the juvenile offender.
